Kahr builds on Kryptek success

Camo is becoming a popular colour for American consumers when it comes to pistol style, and Kahr Firearms has picked up on the trend with the release of a Kryptek finish on four of its conceal-carry pistols.

The Kryptek pattern proved so well liked on two of its most popular limited edition Desert Eagles that it sold out almost immediately. Now, Kahr Arms is bringing back the popular Kryptek finish but this time it will be offered on four of its small conceal-carry pistols. These models are from its Value Series and include three 9mm pistols and one .380 ACP.

The CW9093KRT model features a 3½in barrel with conventional rifling, an overall length of 5.9 inches, and a height of 4½ inches. All three models offer a trigger cocking DAO, lock-breach, Browning-type recoil lug, and a passive striker block with no magazine disconnect. The pistol sight offers a drift adjustable white two-dot rear, and a white dot pinned in polymer front sight. Capacity is 7+1. The pistol features the new Kryptek Camo pattern, which utilises a water transfer method that has been successfully tested for durability. The slide trigger and slide stop lever are all finished in the Cerakote Armor Black coating.

Next in the line-up is the CM9093KRT, which includes all the features of the CW9093KRT, except it has a 3in barrel, overall length of 5.4 inches and height of four inches.

The Kryptek finish with Armor Black slide is also found in the CT9093KRT. Like the other pistols listed above, it has all the same features, except it has a 4in barrel, 6½in overall length and a height of 5.08 inches.

The smallest, most popular conceal-carry pistol in this new Kryptek Camo pattern is the CW3833KRT. This .380 ACP features a 2.58in barrel, overall length of five inches and a height of just 3.9 inches. It has a smaller ¾in slide width as well. Like its bigger brothers, it has a white three-dot sight, 7+1 capacity, 7lb trigger pull and also ships with one magazine.
